Tip of the week

Keep up to date...

Most people you meet online don't want to hurt you. But some might.

Also keep copies of abusive conversations, blogs or emails, in case you ever need proof that someone is trying to abuse you.

The links below connect to people who will help you if you're getting bothered by people you don't know.

Remember: Reporting abuse makes the web safer for everyone.

Reassurance

66% of parents state that they are worried about their children encountering paedophiles - Staying Safe Survey 2009, DCSF

“I work with young people they tell me they start [using SNS] from the age of seven! They face abuse on line every day, this button must be made available”

“I work as a teaching assistant in an infant school... I think the CEOP scheme is an excellent idea and should be implemented for younger [internet] users who are still very vulnerable at 13”

“I will not let my kids use any site without one”

Case Study #1

In March 2007, a parent used the CLICKCEOP button to report an individual inciting her 12 year old daughter to perform sexual acts online.

Intelligence was disseminated by CEOP to North Yorkshire Police.

In September 2007, a warrant was executed. The suspect’s computer was seized and examined.

Computer analysis revealed 70 potential victims, 1300 indecent images and 60 indecent videos of children. The report made with the CLICKCEOP button alerted law enforcement to the offender.
Case Study #2

CEOP worked closely with the girl who made the report and the US authorities to establish contact with the relevant US authorities, whilst attempting to contact the girl who made the report.

CEOP made contact with the girl who registered the report, and established that she had also been abused by the suspect, having been groomed to perform sexual acts on webcam.

The US authorities used this information to identify the suspect, a 5-year-old girl whom he was due to babysit in 4 days time. It was also found that he was due to babysit a 5-year-old girl on the day mentioned.

CEOP immediately established contact with the relevant US authorities, whilst attempting to contact the girl who made the report. By making a report to CEOP, the 17-year-old victim was able to prevent the rape of a 5-year-old girl.
